

Many gravitational-wave transients have been detected in the last few years. Persistent gravitational-wave sources are also expected to exist, although they have not yet been detected. In these lectures, I will provide some astronomy background for gravitational-wave sources. I will discuss stellar evolution, pulsars and gamma-ray bursts, and the synergy between gravitational-wave and electromagnetic observations of both transient and continuous gravitational-wave sources.